

Dear Friends,

I love making new friends. Some of my friends come from the books I've read. Others, are people I have met in my life and, still, others are the friends I create when I write. I would like to introduce you to a friend I met some time ago. His name is Emerson Ham. It wasn't quite spring but you could tell that it was on the way. There was that light, sweet air that caught your nose, made it itch, and filled it with all the fragrances of fresh things slowly popping their heads above the ground. It was Friday, late afternoon, and the sun was just beginning to stretch its arms to hold back the cover of night so that it could catch a longer glimpse of my uncle, Ashley, and I hurrying to make the last mail boat to the island...

George Sandy Campbell is an artist and a retired literacy coach who comes away from the educational environment, believing that learning is most effective when it is an ongoing collaborative and explorative process for both teacher and student.

Author's voice:

Sandy Campbell

